That's why we recommend using a version field to separate the different changes in your node as you add or change functionality of custom nodes. Here's the serialized type definition for Lexical's base TextNode class: <pre data-bbox="777 936 1118 1549">import type {Spread} from 'lexical'; // Spread is a Typescript utility that allows us to spread the properties // over the base SerializedLexicalNode type. export type SerializedTextNode = Spread< { detail: number; format: number; mode: TextModeType; style: string; text: string; }, SerializedLexicalNode >;</pre> If we wanted to make changes to the above TextNode, we should be sure to not remove or change an existing property, as this can cause data corruption. Instead, opt to add the functionality as a new property
